The New Orleans Rulletin is highly offended at the editor of the Standard, for suching his paper to it. The Memphis Enquirer, another ultra Southern paper, thinks that an "exchange of papers would be a fruitless expense," while the Paulding (Miss) Eastern Sentinel accepts the offer of an exchange, readily wondering what need the Standard "can have of a pro-Slavery paper."

THURSDAY, May 3, 1849. THE MERCANTILE FLEET. - Yesterday there are rived at this port upward of 74 vessels in all, beside 1 more reported below. Nearly all of these were from foreign ports.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—This body held its annual meeting on Tuesday last. Mores II. Grinnell (Vice-President) was unanimously elected President, J. D. P. Ogden First Vice-President, and Prosper M. Wetmore Second Vice President. Mr. Maury was chosen Secretary, and J. J. Palmer was reflected are, it seems, position, We think their members win regret having insulted a British Governor for doing what was too long neglected by British Governors before the Revolution—listeding to the voice of the governed, calmly, deliberately and constitutionally expressed. Had that been done before 1837, much trouble would have been avoided. Lord E. was expelled from the St. Andrews' Society by a unanimous voto? FIRES.-Yesterday afternoon a fire was discov ered in a machine shop in Bethune at which is supposed to have been the work of an incondiary. It was extinguished after doing trifling damage About 8 o'clock last evening a fire broke out in the house No. 280 Nulberry at, which originated from the burning of the chimney. By the assistance of some citizens it was put out before much damage was sustained.

IF Raspail, one of the French state criminals who have just been convicted and sentenced at Bourges, is the distinguished chemist and physician whose name is connected with several of the most distinguished scientific works of modern times. He was sentenced to six years imprisonment, and he and his fellow prisoners are now confined at the tower of Jacques Cear, where he daily receives visits from persons who come to consult him about maiadies under which they labor, or for preventives sgainst the chol ers. He affirms that in following the method which he prescribes, the cholera is no more to be foared than a common cold. He is perfectly eain under his sentence, which seems to affect him less than that his word should not have been believed.

Tour old friend, ex-Senator Reyburn of Miami County, having seen his name mentioned in connection with the next Congress in several Whig papers, alludes to it incidentally in a business letter we have just received from him, remarking that he supposed that the mention of his name is rather complimentary than otherwise. He does not say whether he desires the nomination, but concludes his brief allusion to the subject by remarking. It is neverly hope that the Golden soil won by the blood of Freemen, will nover be blighted by the withering curse of Negro Stavery—to which we heartily say Amen. [St. Joseph's (tid.) that he had known nothing of the proceedings of the Store keeper, and eventually the crowd dispersed, upon his giving his word of honor that they should be disarmed the first thing in the morning.

The story runs that these swords and pistels were distributed at the order of Lord Eighn or of his brother, Coi. Bruce, neither of whom had the slightest right to direct such a proceeding and that Sir lien D'Irban, when he heard of what had taken place, informed the members of the Executive that when properly called on he was quite able to support the civil power; but the proper weapon of the civil power was ine trunchen, and that if there were armed men-employed accident those under his command, he would withdraw hetropy. This settled the thing at ance, for all the French they could muster in the city, with as many sabres as they pleased would have been capsized in Sminutes by the ax handles, had they could to a single-handed fight.

On Saturday morning the arms given out the night before were all duly returned to the ordnance stores. The weakness and vaciliation of the Government is, perhaps, shown in a more discreditable light in this circumstance than in all the rest of their conduct. It was more dangerous though not more indicrous. The two Houses met again yesterday in the Housecome Market. The "Lords" had the Eastern Hall, or rather one end of it; for the Government, though unable to wield the ample force at its disposal in town, had been driven by excess of funk to bring in 200 men of the 71st regiment from St. Johns, and these fare follows it is splendid Scotch regiment; were quartered in the extempore chamber of the legislature Council. They had not been for a long time in such good company, or good barracks, and seemed to enjoy themselves smallingly, as they went through their cating and drinking washing and pipe-claying in the sugust presence of the lipper Branch of the Legislature gravely debating at the formation the dobate was rather protracted than violent, though of course some passionate speeches were made. Ministers merely moved the adjournment. One of their supporters, H. J. Bouthon, however, proposed an address to his Excellency, which smounted to a vote of confidence in him and in the Ministry, as well as an assurance that the House would make every exertion to rostore order. In the hope of carrying this address ubanimously, it was gradually modified until toost all its original leasures, as a vote of confidence, and then the Administration, stuck at a single word—an expression of attachment to the "person" of the Governor—and thus carried their vote only by their old expression of attachment to the "person" of the Governor—and thus carried their vote only by their old the Robel Leases bilk and especially for coming down to give his assent without the usual notice, Papineau—the Papineau, made a very telling speech against his quest aline. He said that naving by their feebleness and indecision given the city up to the mercy of a most for three days, they came down to the House with no other proposition than a motion to adjourn. Yet as eager were they for compliments, that no sooner did one of their friends propose a vote of condidence in them, than they strained every herve to carry it. That was not the time to praise them, nor even to judge them. The first thing was to restore order, and on that subject every man in the House was of one mind; they ought, therefore, to carry an address touching on to other subject—one calculated to show the whole country, that on that question there was cheerful unalimity among the hipresentatives of the people.

About 12 debek it was efficially announced in the House, that the French Specials were disarmed; and slittle after the political prisoners were released on hall, and were escorted home by large crowds, whom they addressed on the square in front of the Cathedral Church. They had again inflicted a small, and therefore, more humiliating defeat on the Government. In doing so, she remarked, playfully, "suppose the tree should fail on me," to which the husband, in a similar spirit, replied, "you must try and get out of the way."
